Roman Coliseum leaves spiritual impresson

Editor's Note: Sunday kicks off Holy Week, the most spiritual week for Christians around the world, which commemorates the death of Jesus Christ.

If someone asked me if I was a Christian, I'd say, "Yeah, sure."

If I was asked to quote the Bible, I'd be a little weak after "In the beginning."

If you asked me if I went to church, I'd probably say, "What year?"

I really hope that line about God loving a sinner is true. I'm sure my

New to the island, or PCSing soon?

The Way I See It

name's got black marks by it. I've been known to use four letter words occasionally and lose my temper and be selfish and insensitive . . . okay, enough already.

You know how it is. It's hard to get out of bed on a Sunday or there's always something else going on, or it's just too hot to go sit in the chapel, or it's raining and back in the states, there were even more excuses.

I just went to Italy on vacation. I just got back on island a week ago. All of Italy is beautiful and a work of art. Everywhere is ancient Roman ruins. Places that are as old as 3500 B.C. Places as majestic as St. Peter's Basilica and St. Peter's Square. I was impressed by everything I saw.

But the one place that made what I hope is the most lasting impression was the Coliseum.

It wasn't how massive it is, or how it must have looked at the height of the Roman Empire. It came to me as I marveled at it and thought how I was standing where gladiators fought and Roman emperors walked.

There were other people who walked there too. They were people who believed in Christ so much that they died for their faith in Him. They entered the arena and gave themselves up. They were crucified, burned alive and ripped to pieces by animals for the enjoyment and entertainment of the Roman crowd. Some of them sang of their faith as they died. They believed in loving their enemies and forgiving them.

I've read books and seen movies . . . But nothing ever brought it home to me like standing in the place where it actually happened. I can't begin to imagine the agony they endured because they had such a faith. I stood there truly humbled by the thought.

I returned to Kwaj on a Friday. I didn't find any excuses to miss church on Sunday.

Candles not as dangerous as story indicates

In the March 30th edition of the Hourglass in an article titled "Work candles violate regs, put people at risk," assistant chief of fire prevention Mike Gabany is quoted as saying, "I do not like candles. Many fires involve candles" and reporter Jan Waddell reports that he said that many of the decorative candles sold on island with flowers, twigs and other items embedded in them present unseen danger.

It is true that "many fires involve candles," however, logical entailment dictates that such a consideration be viewed from cause to effect. If we examined what percentage candle burning 'events' actually resulted in uncontrolled fires, we would see that the percentage is actually very low, so in all honesty the dire hazardous scenario must be reevaluated.

If one illogically views the matter from effect to cause, then we are viewing the matter from a biased perspective because we are considering a biased sample.

It may also be true that a minority of decorative candles present a hazard when burned, however, I think we can safely inductively presume that burning the average candle will not result in our homes going up in flames.

We can also safely presume that candle manufacturers do not generally set out to create extremely hazardous candles. Consider this, along with the fact that army regs were written with the responsibility level of the average 19-year-old youngster just out of mama's clutches in mind, not a 40-year-old mother of four working in an office environment.

Be that as it may, if the regs actually say that we can't burn candles, then until a change is made, then we can't legally burn candles. But are we "at high risk"; are we all in grave danger? Reason suggests otherwise.

Cold Storage enters operational testing phase

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

There is a now place on Kwajalein where the temperature registers -5 degrees.

The new cold storage facility has started the 30-day operational test of the refrigeration and freezer units. The refrigeration unit's temperature is around 35 degrees and the freezer units register around -5 degrees.

"We are getting to the closing of the start-up stage," said Marty Olson, Army Corps of Engineers project engineer.

After the 30-day test stage, the entire facility undergoes an inspection.

"[The inspection is] a real detailed check list," said Olson "We are shooting for the middle of May."

He said they still have several steps to go through before the food is brought into the facility, but still expects to start to utilize the building in May.

The construction of the new facility started in August 2002.

The outside walls of the cold storage building are six inches thick and both the walls and the roof were pre-constructed in Hawaii then shipped to Kwajalein where they were erected. The entire facility is 198 feet by 126 feet, giving it around 25,000 square feet, according to Olson, which it is about 10 times the space in the old cold storage.

According to Olson, a wider variety and larger quantity of items can now be stored at the new facility as a result of the additional space.

The new facility has three refrigeration units and three freezer units, along with a special ice storage unit.

There is also a separate compartment where products for Meck and Roi are stored prior to shipment.

There are 16 compressors for the refrigerator and freezer units

"If one compressor went down we won't lose it all," said Olson. If a compressor goes down it can be bypassed and repaired without impacting the rest of the compressors.

The facility features two ice machines and an ice bagger. The ice will be used for Surfway, 10-10 and the small boat marina, Olson said.

Olson said they are currently adding the finishing touches to the main offices and restroom facilities, which also include showers and locker areas.

Outside the building there is a 20-foot wide concrete slab area complete with electrical outlets, which will hold 25 refrigeration containers.

Three electric forklifts will move items within the new facility, while the diesel forklifts will be used outside.

The electric forklifts will always stay inside the facility said Olson. There are electrical outlets inside where they can be recharged.

"Now they have a storage place for them," Olson said.

After the testing and inspections the next step is the training of employees and the fire department for the new facility.

"This has been a good project," said Olson "A professional job."

Registration, please

Lt. Gail Fabrizio, right, and Mike Herrington, not pictured, inspect a water taxi operated by Robert Debrum, left, Wednesday. As of Thursday, all water taxis must have a USAKA registration which means they must have life jackets for all aboard, running lights, a fire extinguisher, anchor with line and chain, VHF radio and, for single-engine craft, paddles. The registration follows a water safety class KPD gave, which 26 water taxi operators attended. Another class could be scheduled as the need arises, Herrington said.

Police detain two men with illegal carry-ons

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

Kwajalein Police detained two individuals Saturday for attempting to carry box cutters, utility blades, razors blades and surgical blades onto Continental flight 957 to Guam.

KPD later arrested Emiliano Mendigorin Eligio Jr., 40, a Philippine national, for trying to board the flight and detained Manoj Kumar Kewlani, 22, an Indian national, already on-board flight 957.

The FBI later released Kewlani who had boarded the flight in Majuro.

"We took out everything and found things concealed."

Around 11 a.m., as Eligio, the last person to be processed, checked in, KPD Sgt. Paul Cunningham, who manned the x-ray machine at the airport, noticed what "appeared to be razor blades" in Eligio's carry-on bag.

"I couldn't believe he had box cutters in his bag," Cunningham said. "After 9-11 everybody knows what was used and what happened."

Cunningham sent the carry-on through the x-ray machine several times so they could "weed out everything."

"We couldn't find anything at first," KPD Lt. Joanna Bucknam said. "We took out everything and found things concealed."

Bucknam notified Deputy Chief of Police Denise Morrow that box cutters, utility blades and surgical blades along with two passports were detected in Eligio's carry-on luggage during a pre-boarding x-ray and physical inspection of carry-on luggage.

"Anytime we see two passports that sends up a red flag," Morrow said.

Morrow asked Eligio several times if he had any weapons and he said "No."

"We kept control of the bag and kept running it through [x-ray] until we found every object that looked suspicious," Morrow said. "[We] also pulled his checked baggage."

Multiple searches of his carry-on uncovered several utility blades, box cutters, hidden in the side pocket of his carry-on, surgical blades hidden inside a perfume bottle box and utility blades, wrapped in masking tape and concealed in a sewing kit along with some large sewing needles. Further searches revealed several drill bits and an allen wrench.

The above are just some of the items confiscated from the carry-on bag of would-be Continental passenger Emiliano Eligio, who was detained and later arrested at Bucholz Army Airfield on Kwajalein, Saturday.

"In hand-carry bags, normally you carry essentials," Bucknam said.

Eligio also checked two cardboard boxes, which contained black ski masks and assorted tools.

"It seemed intentional," said Donna Groth, terminal supervisor. "The thing that was unusual was the ski masks."

Eligio was acting a little nervous, Cunningham said. Eligio said he had been fired from his job on Ebeye. That sent up more red flags.

The expired Philippine passport, issued to Eligio, contained entry-exit stamps from the Middle East, stamps confirmed by Military Intelligence. His current passport only contained United States, Republic of the Marshall Islands and Philippine stamps.

Groth contacted the Transportation Security Administration who instructed her to arrest Eligio.

"He didn't say anything," Groth said.

KPD took the suspect to a "closed area and the airport was evacuated," Morrow said.

KPD searched the out-processing area of the airport, which included a bomb search with the explosive detector dog, and all passengers were re-searched, she added.

"Just as a precaution," Morrow said.

"Any place somebody could have hidden something," was searched, Groth said.

KPD found a surgical blade wrapper on the floor, during the search of the out-processing area.

According to Morrow, the passengers were glad they did such an intensive search.

"No one balked about it," Morrow said. "It made things so much easier. We are doing these things for their safety. We are here to save lives."

"No one was agitated. No one was upset," Groth said.

"This could have been a [terrorist] test."

Later, when Continental flight 957 landed on Kwajalein, Cunningham noticed a suspicious man standing in the doorway of the plane.

Cunningham said the man drew attention to himself by wearing a black leather jacket in warm weather.

"No one is to come off [the plane] or even get in the door way," Cunningham said.

The only individuals allowed off the planes are the ones whose destination is Kwajalein.

Groth spoke with the airline flight attendants about the passenger, finding some of his actions

Suspect held on Guam ...

suspicious, in light of the current situation.

He was wearing "a heavy leather jacket. It looked a little too big for him," Groth said.

"[His actions] kept bothering me. He wasn't using the restroom. He was just standing by the [airline] door," Groth said.

When Kewlani returned to his seat, Groth approached him and asked to see his passport and boarding pass.

She noticed Kewlani also had Middle Eastern stamps on his Indian passport.

"He was very polite," Groth said.

She asked him to bring his carry-on and she took him to a private screening room and searched his jacket and carry-on luggage.

The search revealed two safety pins and 50 razor blades along with $2,000 in U.S. currency.

"Majuro should have caught that," Bucknam said. "It is on the prohibited list."

Majuro, Kosrae and Pohnpei airports are making security changes as a result of the incident, Groth said. "We are already above and beyond. We have everything done before the plane arrives."

KPD also searched the three rows of seats on flight 957, in Kewlani's seating area, along with the airplane's restroom.

According to Bucknam, Kewlani made comment about how good the security was on Kwajalein.

"He complemented our security procedures. Who knows if these people were testing us? Maybe this was nothing," Bucknam said.

"Overall [passengers] cooperated. Everyone wanted to be safe," Groth said.

Lt. Moses Moreno and Sgt. Michael Larson escorted the two suspects to Guam, and turned them over to the Guam resident FBI agent.

Moreno and Larson sat in the back of the plane along with the two suspects.

"Both of them were pretty passive," Moreno said.

"[Eligio] wanted to call home," Larson said. "He was passive."

"This could have been a [terrorist] test," Moreno said.

According to both Larson and Moreno, the two suspects didn't appear to know each other.

Kewlani was flying to Pohnpei and Eligio was flying to the Philippines to meet his wife, Moreno said.

"[Eligio] just wanted to call his wife," Moreno said, adding Eligio was concerned his wife would drive to the airport and she would not know what happened to him when he did not get off the plane.

The FBI released Kewlani when they determined he was not a threat and the razor blades found in his possession were determined to be consistent with use.

Eligio is currently being questioned by the FBI. He could face felony charges.

"This is the first incident on Kwajalein since 9-11" when the new airline regulations went into effect, Morrow said.

According to Morrow, Eligio worked on Ebeye at the Ebeye hospital, possibly as a plumber, and he did visit Kwajalein.

"[Eligio] was on the [Kwajalein] access list," Morrow said.

KPD is working with the Ebeye Police Department to track Eligio's movements and who he associated with.

"Everything ran smoothly. No one was alarmed," Bucknam said.

Do's and don'ts for safer air travel

To avoid problems and situations with authorities and airline regulations, Morrow advises travelers not to carry any prohibited items.

"Don't carry any sharp objects in a carry-on," she added.

Groth said, "Travel light with your hand-carry. Take just what you need."

Groth said tools, scissors — even cuticle type — knitting needles and thumb tacks will be confiscated if they are in carry-on bags.

Cunningham said, "Anything you have a doubt on, put in your check-in bag."

Cooperate with law enforcement and airport officials, Morrow said. Federal regulations are for passenger's safety.

She also advised, "Be aware of your surroundings. If something seems out of character for the surroundings then notify someone. Better to be safe. Anybody could be a terrorist."

Marshallese teams pass on b-ball

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Marshallese basketball teams will boycott the 2004 season because of what they feel represents harrasment by local law enforcement officials.

"They are saying it's over the treatment over the past year and this softball season," said Noda Lojkar, USAKA ombudsman.

All Marshallese teams, except the Job Corps teams, have joined in the boycott.

The charges stem from perceived harrasment, mostly regarding drinking, at the softball fields, which is a designated drinking area, Lojkar said. The teams say only Americans have been allowed to drink at games, while Marshallese have been ticketed, as have their sponsors, as well. In protest, however, the team players gathered and, after meeting with traditional leaders, announced the boycott at the manager's meeting last week.

"I'm very disturbed by what I've heard," said Col. Jerry Brown, USAKA commander. "I want to assure the Kwajalein community — both American and Marshallese — that any form of harassment by anyone simply will not be tolerated.

"I take these allegations seriously and will investigate them thoroughly," he added. "Meanwhile, I ask the Kwajalein sports community to stay the course through this investigation, and keep the sports program alive. I will designate a senior official to deal with any future reports of this nature during the investigation."

The boycott will affect the season because Marshallese normally field up to around 15 teams in the leagues, said Torrey Landers, Recreation superintendent.

"That's roughly half the total number of teams," he said. "The biggest effect is with the kids' teams."

Last season, for example, the league had 14 Marshallese teams. The Men's D Division featured six teams, Spartans III boys, the youngest of the Kwajalein youth teams, and five Marshallese youth teams from Queen of Peace High School and SDA school, to name a few.

"The younger Spartans teams don't have anyone to play," he said, adding this season you'll see 12- and 13-year-olds going up against adult men and women.

Basketball is one of the most popular sports on Ebeye, because they have courts, but do not have large open fields for other sports, Lojkar said.

In fact, one court, in the multi-purpose facility built by the U.S. Army North Dakota National Guard two years ago, is set for renovations and improvements under a $76,000 Japanese government grant, Lojkar said. The facility will receive new lights; paint; new, mobile backboards and baskets; along with other upgrades.

"It's going to look nice when it's finished," Lojkar said.

Lojkar added he didn't know if the teams would form their own league on Ebeye, but noted that an American team has played over there in pick-up games.

Father and son reunite at Baghdad International

By Joy Kress

Special to American Forces Press Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — "You could have pushed me over with a feather."

That was Roger McCrady's reaction when he stepped off a plane Jan. 23 at Baghdad International Airport in Iraq to find his youngest son waiting for him on the ground.

McCrady, a retired Air Force chief master sergeant and chief of physical security for Defense Logistics Agency's headquarters at Fort Belvoir, never imagined that the first thing he would see when he arrived to work for the Coalition Provisional Authority would be his son's smile.

Army Pfc. Brian McCrady had been stationed in Tikrit, Iraq, since July 2003 as a combat medic with the 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), part of the 56th Medical Evacuation Battalion under the 44th Medical Command.

Although Brian already had worked his way through most of the northern part of the country, he had never made it to Iraq's capital.

"I asked my platoon leader if I could arrange a ride down to Baghdad to meet up with my dad," Brian said. "They got me a ride, but, unfortunately, I got to Baghdad a few days before my dad was supposed to arrive."

With time on his hands, Brian was able to stay with the 28th Combat Support Hospital's soldiers for sleeping quarters and spent the rest of his days exploring Baghdad's Green Zone, the area that encompasses CPA headquarters along with other official buildings.

In his exploration, Brian was able to find the colonel with whom his father would work at the CPA. With the colonel's help, as well as by navigating his way through the chain of command, he found out the exact time the elder McCrady would arrive.

"I found a way to (the airport), and when my dad's plane landed, I was right there to greet him," Brian said. "There wasn't a welcoming party for him, so it was actually a good thing I was there and could help show him around," the young soldier added.

"It was so great to see him there," Roger said. "I couldn't believe how well he networked himself through the area. By the end of the day, I had introduced him to generals and ambassadors."

The younger McCrady knew it was a chance of a lifetime to be with his father in a combat zone, but he said to see Baghdad was an equally impressive opportunity.

"I'm glad I got to see a different side of this war," Brian said. "Not only did I see 28th CSH, which was the best medical unit in Iraq at that time, I've seen what the business and policy side of this war looks like. In Tikrit, Kirkuk, Balad, Tuz (and) Halawijh, you see poverty and barren land. But in Baghdad, it's like you are in a real civilization again. Many people from my unit who had been in Iraq almost a year never got this experience."

With this coordinated chain of events, both McCradys were able to walk around the Green Zone together, stroll through a former regime palace and chat over cups of coffee in the Green Zone coffee house in what is now a new Iraq.

Seeing his son in Baghdad was a great relief, Roger said. Also, he said, knowing that his son would return to the United States in a month was encouraging. But Roger's job was just beginning.

Named the deputy security director for the Department of Defense Program Management Office at the CPA, Roger's long hours spent on security policy to build a sovereign nation would not be easy business.

"Seeing Brian in person and knowing he was OK was a great personal relief to me," Roger said. "Knowing his time here in Iraq was almost over and he was going home enabled me to focus on the job at hand and to get busy building a security program for the PMO."

"PMO is the organization tasked with rebuilding Iraq's infrastructure," he explained. "We have the challenge of completing over 2,300 construction projects over the next few years. A common saying in PMO is, 'There can be no security without reconstruction, and there can be no reconstruction without security.'"

"We have a huge challenge here," he continued. "If we do our job right, we will change this part of the world for years to come, possibly forever. I also have a feeling that if we don't get it right now, we will definitely regret it in the future."

Brian returned with his company to Fort Benning, Ga., in early March. Roger should return to the United States and to DLA headquarters sometime in July.

DLA provides supply support, and technical and logistics services to the U.S. military services and several federal civilian agencies. Headquartered at Fort Belvoir, Va., the agency is the one source for nearly every consumable item, whether for combat readiness, emergency preparedness or day-to-day operations.
